Engage educators, elected officials, community leaders, and civics education activists in high-quality discussions about ways to improve Civics Education in Delaware.

WHY

- Polling data indicate that many Americans (including students) have a woeful understanding of the basic principles and institutions of our representative democracy form of government.
- Delaware schools have the potential to help prepare their students not just for college and careers, but also to be productive, civil citizens.
- Delaware will be introducing a rigorous social studies assessment that will count toward school accountability ratings.

GOALS

- Offer educators, elected officials, and community leaders an opportunity to connect and engage in substantive discussions about civics education.
- Develop a high-quality, education-based action plan to begin the process of preparing Delaware youth to carry out their responsibilities in a representative democracy.
