The Institute for Public Administration’s Democracy Project presents

The Democracy Project Institute for Teachers brings together teachers and leaders in government and education to discuss the importance of civic participation for the future of our democratic society and collaborate on ways to inspire active youth citizenship.

Past presenters included:

- Members of Delaware’s Congressional Delegation
- Delaware’s Governor
- Members of the Delaware General Assembly
- Delaware’s Secretary of State
- Local government leaders
- Lobbyists, political scientists, and authors

Teachers will have the opportunity to:

- Refresh their appreciation of the conflict and compromise that ensure true representative democracy
- Develop innovative and interactive teaching strategies to inspire youth to become involved in democracy
- Deepen their understanding of Delaware and national civics standards
- Share ideas and network with colleagues and program speakers

The Institute is designed to improve the teaching and learning of civics by enhancing participants’ content knowledge, resources, and instructional and assessment practices.
